So the father rose and opened the door, letting in a rush of icy air. Before him stood a towering white bear.

"I have watched your family all summer," said the bear, in a rumbling voice. "And I am ready to make you an offer."

"If you give me your youngest daughter," he went on, "I can make you as rich as you are now poor."

"I'll not give you my daughter," said the father, blocking the way, "however poor we may be."
